Excerpt from Rod Creel in British Columbia
Of recreation there is none so free as fishing is alone, All other pastimes do not less than mind and body both possess! My hand alone my work can do so I can fish and study, too. The above lines are taken from the Compleat Angler, the most famous book on fishing ever written or likely to be written, by Isaac Walton, than whom no greater fisherman ever lived. Isaac Walton was born at Stafford in England in the year 1593, but it was not until the year 1653 that the first edition of his book was published. How many editions have since been published cannot be exactly stated, but there were five alone in the thirty years he lived after the book was written (he was just 90 when he died) and over a hundred editions since. The book itself, of course, is now of little value as a treatise, but as Lamb said, It would sweeten a man's temper at any time to read it, and it seems to show what a gentle, kindly, sincere spirit the ideal angler should be. Of all sports and recreations there is nothing like fishing, in which a person is so entirely dependent upon the skill of his own hand, combined with a well-developed store of patience and perseverance. Of all sports there is nothing like fishing, which will develop the above traits and tend to make a man of kindly, upright disposition and keep him both physically and morally healthy. Of all sports there is nothing like fishing, which will keep a youngster out of mischief and mould his character along the right lines. The famous Dr. Samuel Johnson, though he was a great admirer of Walton's book, once described fishing as a rod and line with a worm at one end and a fool at the other. There have been more jokes made about fishermen than any other class of sportsmen. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
